If it seems like it never stops raining, blame the Russians. Or even the North Koreans.

CIA chiefs fear hostile nations are trying to manipulate the world's weather, a conference heard.

A leading academic has told how he got a mysterious phone call asking whether foreign countries could be triggering droughts or flooding.

Professor Alan Robock, from Rutgers University in New Jersey, said: 'Consultants working for the CIA rang and said we'd like to know if someone is controlling the world's climate would we know about it?'

'Of course they were also asking - if we control someone else's climate would they then know about it.'

The professor is one of many scientists from around the world are actively looking at manipulating the weather as a way of combating climate change.

Geoengineering techniques range from cloud seeding, in which chemicals are sprayed by planes trigger rainfall, to shooting mirrors into space to reflect sunlight and cool the Earth.

Professor Robock told the callers that any attempts to meddle with the weather on a large scale would be detectable.

However, he told the American Association for the Advancement of Science's annual conference in San Jose, that the weather has been weaponised in the past.

During the Vietnam War, US scientists tried to increase rainfall to hamper the enemy's progress by spraying particles into the clouds.

And the CIA seeded clouds over Cuba 'to make it rain and ruin the sugar harvest'.

Asked how he felt when he got the call, the professor said: 'Scared.'

'I'd learned of lots of other things the CIA had done that haven't followed the rules and that wasn't how I wanted my tax money spent.'

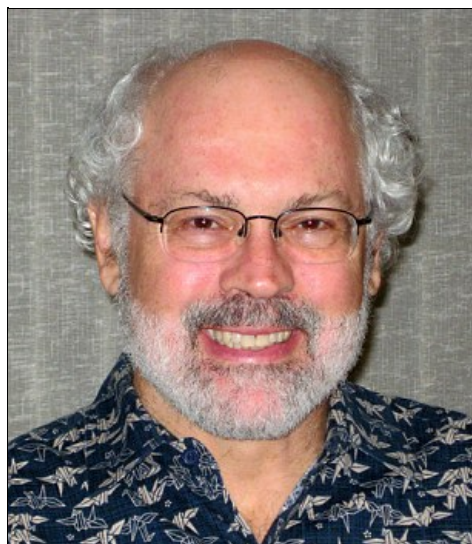

'I think this research has to be open and international, so there isn't any question of using it for hostile purposes.'

To add to the intrigue, the CIA is believed to have helped fund a major report into geoengineering.

Published last week by the prestigious US National Academy of Sciences, the report mentions the 'US intelligence community' in its list of sponsors, alongside organisations such as Nasa.

Professor Robock said the CIA had told one of his colleagues it wanted to fund the report, but apparently did not want this fact to be too obvious.

He said: 'The CIA is a major funder of the National Academies report so that makes me really worried who is going to be in control.'

He added that the tension created by any large-scale meddling in the climate could escalate to such an extent that it would end in all-out war.

The professor said: 'If one country wants to control the climate in one way, and another doesn't want it or if they try to shoot down the planes...if there is no agreement it could result in terrible consequences.'

What I have found is when those planes spray their chemicals, it stops the natural rain cycle and the clouds do not form, and it doesn't rain, so I would say they have the drought effect down solid by now.

In our city, cloud seeding, i.e. chem trails goes on day after day after day...one can bet, IF there is one beautiful blue sky day, with not one natural cloud in it, the chem trail airplanes will start their sorties over the city and within hours, the blue sky is gone and the gray day has taken over....this causes less plant life and we can only guess what the long-term damage is on our health via the chemicals they are seeding the atmosphere with...yet, we the citizenry, have no rights to stop it, no way to complain about it, no way to vote for or against it...and so this headline is a little puzzling to me. Many people have proven that the drought in California, which is taking out most of our vegetable, fruit, and nut production is totally man made....because, IF this article even had a 'seed' of truth in it and the weather modification ability is there AND it can cause rain, as presented, then why hasn't it been put into use in California to get them that much needed rain?

Don't conflate chemtrails with cloud seeding. They are completely different things, with opposite purposes. Hilarious the CIA wants to know if RUSSIA is doing it. They KNOW who is doing it.
